PREFACE

The manual is intended for English language students taking the course of English Lexicology. It fully meets the requirements of the program in the subject. Its main purpose is to introduce the students to some major lexicological problems connected with the general theory of the word. The reader will find here the fundamentals of the word theory and the main problems associated with English vocabulary, its characteristics and subdivisions. It consists of two parts. The first part includes 14 chapters. Each chapter includes the theoretical material on the problem under consideration and suggested topics to be discussed.

The second part of the book contains exercises for seminars and independent work. This part of the book also includes tests aimed at checking up the comprehension of the theoretical material and the ability to apply it in practice.

At the end of the book, one can find the glossary and the following appendices: the table of English affixes (prefixes and suffixes), common abbreviations, original sources of some lexical units.

The book may also be of interest to all readers who would like to gain some information about the vocabulary resources of Modern English, for example, about synonyms and antonyms, stylistic peculiarities of the English vocabulary, the complex nature of the word's meaning and the modern linguistic methods of its investigation, those changes that English vocabulary underwent in its historical development, about English phraseology and some other aspects of English Lexicology.
